6. Test Procedure:

UNIT TESTING:

In this, different modules are tested against the specifications produced during design for the modules. Unit testing is essentially for the verification of the code produced during the coding phase. This is done by both of us by considering that a module can be used by others only after it has been unit tested satisfactorily. Due to its close association with coding, the coding phase is frequently called “coding and unit testing”.

INTEGRATION TESTING:

In this, many unit tested modules are combined into subsystems, which are then tested. The main goal here is to see if the modules can be integrated properly. Hence, our emphasis is on testing interfaces between modules. Thus, this testing activity can be considered testing the design.

SYSTEM TESTING AND ACCEPTANCE TESTING:

Here the entire software system is tested. The reference document for this purpose is the requirements document and the goal is to see if the software meets its requirements. This is essentially a validation exercise, and in many situations it is only validation activity. Acceptance testing is sometimes performed with realistic data of the client to demonstrate that software is working satisfactorily. Testing here focuses on the external.
